

Associate/Certificate Program Applicants

Students who are over 18 and do not receive a high school diploma because they have not successfully passed their state's high school graduation qualifying exam may be admitted to a certificate or associate degree program. Students under the age of 18 who do not have a high school diploma or GED are not admissible but may take courses as a non-degree student. Upon turning 18, students may reapply for admission to a certificate or associate degree program.

Bachelor's Program Applicants

Students who are over 18 and do not receive a high school diploma because they have not successfully passed their state's high school graduation qualifying exam may be admitted as a pre-major in their field of study. Pre-majors have the rights, benefits and responsibilities of degree-seeking students but are not considered to be in a degree program. After the student has successfully completed 14 UAF credits at the 100 level or above with a C or better (9 credits of which satisfy general education requirements) he/she may be admitted to a bachelor's degree program.
