Paramo hired as new ASD superintendent

Rural Human Service program teaches as it heals

What will Trump be like as GOP nominee?

Moda Health to exit Alaska's individual market

Vanishing Arctic ice shifts jet stream, melts Greenland glaciers

Epic lines already reported as officials try to make travel less of a headache for passengers.

TCD wants to exit individual health market.

Catch a flight? Budget hours, not minutes, for security this summer.
TRUMP: 'He has the biggest upside and the biggest downside,' Gingrich says

Connor L. Whittaker and Matt Zeller

The Washington Post

Tuesday, May 31, 2016

Trump. He has the biggest upside and the biggest downside," Gingrich says. "I'm not expecting a lot of Hicks. If some Republicans were hoping to see his reading of Trump's record, the candidate's history, and how that may shape his approach to governance. But Gingrich's analysis doesn't appear to be based on any real understanding of Trump's campaign or his policies. Instead, it seems to be an attempt to discredit Trump and his supporters, and to encourage Republicans to abandon him.

Gingrich says that Trump's record is not consistent, and that his policies are not clear. He argues that Trump is a politician who has always been more interested in personal gain than in serving the public interest. Gingrich also argues that Trump is not a leader, and that he is not capable of making the tough decisions that are necessary for the country to move forward.

Gingrich's analysis is not based on any real understanding of Trump's record or his policies. Instead, it seems to be an attempt to discredit Trump and his supporters, and to encourage Republicans to abandon him. Gingrich's analysis is not based on any real understanding of Trump's record or his policies. Instead, it seems to be an attempt to discredit Trump and his supporters, and to encourage Republicans to abandon him.