Master of Arts in Applied Linguistics

There are three options under the M.A. in Applied Linguistics:

Emphasis in Documentation and Description
Courses in Linguistics (Phonetics/Phonology, Morphology/Syntax), theory and methodology of language documentation and description, and fieldwork in Native Alaskan communities.

Emphasis in Second Language Acquisition Teacher Education
Courses in Applied Linguistics (Second Language Acquisition, Theory and Methods of L2 Teaching) and curriculum and materials development, and assessment, with special opportunities to work with programs for Alaska Native languages.

General M.A. in Applied Linguistics
Courses in Linguistics and Applied Linguistics and a variety of electives for the student interested in English or Foreign Languages.

Ph.D. in Interdisciplinary Studies

Faculty in the UAF Linguistics Program are able to offer advanced students the possibility of a Ph.D. in Interdisciplinary Studies with a concentration in Linguistics. Students work closely with their advisors and committee members to design a Ph.D. study program tailored to their interests with the expertise of the faculty at UAF.

Linguistics faculty interests and specialties include phonology, phonetics, morphology, typology, syntax, historical linguistics, lexicography, discourse, field linguistics, second language acquisition, language policy and planning, forensic linguistics, Alaska Native languages, English, Foreign Languages, and Language and Education.

For more information, contact

Linguistics Program
3rd & 4th Floors, Brooks Building
P.O. Box 757680
University of Alaska Fairbanks
Fairbanks, AK 99775
voice 907-474-7181
fax 907-474-6586
lyling@uaf.edu

www.uaf.edu/linguist/