An Overview of RAHI
By Jim Kowalsky, RAHI Director

Background

The Rural Alaska Honors Institute, sponsored by the College of Liberal Arts of the University of Alaska Fairbanks, was organized in 1982 at the request of Alaska Native leaders. This program was to initially provide an introduction to college for rural high school juniors or seniors. Students interested in exploring college courses in business, education, engineering, science or resource management are encouraged to apply to this program.

Purpose

RAHI’s goal is to promote success in college. It attempts to do this by providing follow-up support to its participating members after they return home to complete their high school education. Equally important, the program provides continued support while RAHI alumni attend college. During their college careers, RAHI provides important networks among alumni, and connects them with faculty, staff and new students.

RAHI’s Program

Students take a curriculum of academic courses centered around the following areas:

- orientation to college, Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, math, writing, speech, study skills, and swimming.

One college specialty area is also explored, as chosen by each student from among:

- business, engineering, education, resource management, and natural science.

Students collaborate in a team research project related to this specialty area. Evening study halls, a computer/word processing lab and Rasmuson Library provide additional academic development. The instructional staff consists of UAF professors and high school teachers. Recreational, cultural and social programs, one-on-one tutoring and academic and personal counseling are also part of the program. Students work and live within a university setting. RAHI also relies upon the greater Fairbanks area for additional learning resources.

RAHI alumni, as well as other college students, indicate that emotional, social, and other personal problems are the most difficult of any to overcome. Students who do not develop appropriate ways to cope with these problems often find it difficult or impossible to remain in college and to succeed. Therefore to help students achieve later college success, RAHI balances its academic emphasis with a strong residential program designed to prepare students for personal challenges that will face them in college.

Funding

A full scholarship (room and board, tuition, books, supplies, campus fees and round trip travel from home and back) is awarded to all Alaska students selected to attend RAHI. International students from Canada and Greenland are also recruited, but are funded by their own sources.

Challenge Yourself!

The RAHI motto is “Challenge Yourself!” We invite you as a high school student to consider applying for admission. RAHI is an academic and social challenge, an authentic experience in what college life holds for you. It could make a difference in your future. Call or write us for information.
UNSUNG HEROES

Some hard-working persons and programs never get the recognition they deserve for their efforts. The Yearbook staff wishes to express appreciation to several such people and groups of RAHI supporters who have "made" the RAHI experience of 1990, this Yearbook, or both:

1. Denise Wartes is the first voice contact many students have with RAHI itself. We keep Denise busy arranging for our travel, our stipends, and mailing our grades. We'd like to know her better.

3. Upward Bound is RAHI's neighbor-program at UAF in the summer. Worthy competition, whether on the basketball court or the dance floor. Thanks also to the UB program for being good pioneers of the Yearbook capers. We look forward to many more years of good interaction.

2. Wayne Fralick helped all of us in the darkroom, and then refused to have the camera turned on himself. A strip of contact proofsheet is the best commemoration we can offer Wayne, who is the UAF's helpful Wood Center Darkroom Manager.

4. The Polar Ice Coring Office of UAF, located in the O’Neill Building on West Ridge, allowed RAHI the use of its desktop publishing computers for this Yearbook. We thank Dr. John J. Kelley, PICO Director, for that convenience.

Valerie Pingayak

...The eggs are about 5-6 cm. long. They were tan colored with dark speckles all over. The three eggs weighed: 21 - 37 grams
#22 - 39 grams
#23 - 39 grams

...Our first field trip was great. My first canoeing too. Big time fun chasing after baby gulls too. I hope we get to go out and have a beach party....
Beverly A. Johnson

The tunnel, which is manmade, was built in 1962 by the United States Army. The Inside of the tunnel smells really bad because of all the decayed organic materials, such as roots, twigs and bones.

It's very dusty inside because of all the fine dust, silt caused by sublimation.

Sublimation occurs when the ice from the dust evaporates, causing the dust to become dehydrated.

When the dust is dehydrated it is very fine and even the smallest of movements can cause the tunnel to become very dusty.

Within the tunnel walls are made of twigs, roots, rocks and bones and even whole carcasses which have been preserved for hundreds of thousands of years by the ice.

Melanie Joe-Williams

...It is extremely hot today. If we don’t die of sunstroke, we will most certainly be sunburned. The water looks a little murkier than it did last time I was here. I wonder if it has to do with the weather. Our Mission Impossible is to catch as many baby gulls as we possibly can.
3:00-5:00 p.m.

We went to Goose Island Lake to catch and tag baby Mew gulls. The lake was shallow. I doubt that there was one spot over my head. Some parts were so shallow our canoe touched the bottom.

Jennifer Brady
I remember one time when Grandma was visiting us. She was trying to show me how to bake white bread. The dough was in a big silver bowl and she was going to punch it down. She drew a face in the dough, told me to name it and punched it down. Now, whenever my family bakes bread, I think of Grandma.

Sheryl Harry

...After that we went to observe a swallow nesting area. All of us watched a particular hole for about 10 minutes. The nest I was watching had two arrivals and one departure. The first time one of the adults went to the nest and stayed there for about two minutes. Then, about four minutes later another adult went to the nest and was still in there when time was up. The swallow had built their nests on an unmoved gravel pile. Dave took pictures of the structure and we had to find the hole we were looking at in the picture. It was a hot day that day.

Kevin Moto

Class Tuesday July 3, 1990
Today we are going to the Tanana River again so see another Mew gull colony. I get to drive the boat and that's going to be rad.

Steve Hobson III...

On 21 June I found out that the perma-frost is about 30 to 40 feet under the ground. If you build a house above a perma-frost, it will take about 5-6 years to melt and your house will start to twist up. Your house should be built where there are a lot of birch trees.

Andrew Bright

...The atmosphere in Fairbanks has little water vapor because it is so far from a large body of water. Fairbanks is at 18 isoplaths on the map. It is nearer to being hottest and coldest on days of solstice than most places on earth. Yukon Territory, Snag and a few places in the Continental Siberia are even closer.

Tessie Chanerak
The Nunamiut settled and that ended their nomadic way of life. They reside in what is now Anaktuvuk Pass. The main reason they settled in that area was because during spring and fall, animals migrated through the Pass. The people who settled in this area were wise; they knew the land.

Michael Morry

According to the data accumulated by the team of researchers that studied the mammoth, Dima was indeed a baby. However the data on Dima has not been translated into English. This baby mammoth stands approximately one meter at the shoulders from the ground. Its name comes from a creek nearby called Dima....

Melissa Atkinson
Hunting for food has always been the way of my village. I have never heard of the people raising animals or tilling the land. Hunting is our lifestyle and I think it should be kept the way it's always been.

Warren Dock

In the short story "State Champions" by Bobby Ann Mason, the reader thinks he/she is reading a piece of nonfiction. It is emotional, funny and told in a narrative style that leads you to believe that the author is the main character of the story and that all this really did happen to her; only it didn't. It is completely made up.

Amber Bowen

...It was the home I grew up in and therefore the house has a special place in my heart. Most of all, it was the house where I lived with my father and where I have certain memories....

I remember one of the rooms quite well because my brother and I had made a fire in there....Fortunately, nothing happened, except a big black spot remained in the floor which was still there when we moved.

The house was in the capital of Greenland, Nuuk, where I had lived for eight years prior to moving to Sisimiut.

...The church, with the incense, makes me feel like I'm in heaven on earth. The candles that glow lightly catch many people's eyes. The smell reminds me that life has just begun, with another year ahead of us.

Julia Wassillie

...The places where they swim are Alaquuck, a river near Toksook Bay. The other river is Qalulleg, three miles away. On a hot sunny day the bay is usually calm and looks like a big gigantic glass.

Teddy Sipary

...By this time I go towards the gravesite where my relatives are buried, and as I am walking along, I take deep breaths of fresh air....

When I finally reach my destination, I replace all the old flowers with new Forget-Me-Not's that I had picked on my way there, to make the resting places look nice again.

Michele Schaeffer

One essay we read was important to us because it concerned our life. It talked about how college life was and how they would cope with the problems they got during those times they went through....

Douglas Kernak

So one can be sure there is a very fine line between fiction and nonfiction. With either technique, one can write in an effective manner, nonfiction being the solid honest truth and fiction being the "maybe" truth.

Chris Charleson
A new culture has arisen. There are Native corporations protecting and supporting, fighting for the rights of our people. The Athabascan, Tlingit, Haida and Eskimo people are a fine example of a mixed culture that is thriving, even growing as the 21st century looms closer.

Ali Starr

Education enhances us to be whatever we want to be and lets us experience what is out in the world for us. It gives us the opportunity to go places away from home and experience different ways of living. At home we try to learn our way of life and still get an education so that when we get older and we will be the leaders, we will be able to go and sit in the legislature and speak to our people in our own language.

Kimberly Smarch

This is where we find ourselves today, and a very challenging thing is happening. All of a sudden we are being encouraged to bring back the Native culture. To bring back the Native language. To bring back all of the lost heritage. Where does one start?

Amber Bowen

The cultures are changing drastically. They flow with the times. As more time passes by, then the more a culture is forgotten. Then soon your grandkids won't even have a culture.

Corrine Skogen
There are ways to fight losing your culture. You have to have the courage to join forces with your people in order to stop these on-going tragedies. You must unify, come together, and be strong. Keep a good positive attitude. The tools to preserving your heritage are not museums. They’re you. You need to know your language and your land. Take the time to do this. I urge you.

I feel very uneasy when an elder asks me something in Inupiat and I don’t understand what they said. In a way I feel guilty for not knowing my own culture. But if I had someone who would’ve taught me, I’d really try to stress to the people my age to learn about their culture.

Deanna Crosby

In the village where I come from, we don’t have running water and big stores with fresh food arriving daily. We hunt and gather throughout the year for different foods that are far more nutritious than store bought food. As a Native, preserving the land means more to me than developing it. Sheila Black

The Faculty: Student ratio at RAHI is very high, meaning that RAHI students get more exposure to instructors than at most institutions.

Here, JaymzVirg-in seems to be contemplating the female: male ratio in RAHI classes.
.. What they did throughout their lives, still made them take pride in themselves and have respect for others. They told me, “You are still learning, and it’s best if you begin now to become a hard worker or else you’ll be nothing when you grow older.” Therefore, for my parents and for myself, I try to do my best to help others, especially my family. Also I do my best to succeed in life. My values I learned from my parents are important in my life and always will be.

Phoenix

As the sun goes down,
And the night falls in,
This is how it all begins.
All is quiet,
Nothing shakes,
Then from his ashes, he awakens.
Huge as a mountain,
And greatly feared
Strength as great as fifty bears,
Its talons tough,
with meter long claws,
Its body hollow,
Surrounded by flames.
Throughout the world, he holds many a name.
Once again it has broken its ties,
And forever more it takes to the skies.

Chris Charleson

My grandfather is a wise man at the age of seventy. I do not see him as often as I would like to, but I think of him almost every day. My last image of grandfather was him sitting and rocking back and forth in his rocking chair for hours. He smoked a wooden pipe, which filled the house with the unusual sweet smell of burning tobacco. That aroma has always reminded me of my grandfather. I enjoyed sitting and listening to his many stories of adventures and voyages that he made when he was a young boy. His hands were long and skinny. It was obvious that his hands had endured many long years of hard work, because of the roughness of his palms. His wiry gray hair was always under his cap, which he always wore. His eyes were a golden brown and when you looked into them you would feel at ease because his eyes were so friendly and nonjudgemental. His face was covered with soft wrinkle lines. He stands in my shadow and he allows me to make my own mistakes and he lets me know that he is there if I need guidance.

Melissa Atkinson
Throughout my lifetime, I've lived and traveled to large cities. In my eyes, the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages. The City is also full of many interesting people. On a walk through the streets you can meet a street bum with an interesting past, or a "punk" who wants to be understood. You can join a march for abortion, or you can take a walk up the "Hill of Riches" and look at homes worth more than you can imagine. Maude Blair

... She really liked animals. She had a bunch of chickens and each of them was named. She had two cats, Princess and Nubbins, which she loved dearly. Every night she'd call for the cats in her high-pitched voice, "Here kitty, kitty, kitty, kitty..." and at night we used to sit down on the deck and listen to the bullfrog, Charlie, and watch the family of rats going from tree to tree, until they reached the fig tree to eat.... Anon.

Joe Slats, Education and Writing Instructor, looks as if he needs some special persuading at the hands of Ti Dushkin.

ALASKA

In Alaska, what do I see?
From the ocean depths to the tallest tree...
Its fragile beauty is a sign
Of where we must draw the line
Skimming through the lakes and the shores
My inner self, my mind explores
The question of the Last Frontier:
Is its demolition drawing near?
Many would like to preserve the land.
Most are afraid to take a stand.
Politics and money go hand in hand
Too slowly...but surely, eat up the land.

Whistling through the wind I can’t help but hear:
A message of peace, mixed with fear.
Industry...taking its toll
Working toward the ultimate goal
Of leading the nation in time of need
Stripping its soul for endless greed.

The cascading beauty of a rapid stream;
Today’s reality, tomorrow’s dream?
