JUSTIFICATION FOR ACTION REQUESTED

The purpose of the department and campus-wide curriculum committees is to scrutinize course change and new course applications to make sure that the quality of UAF education is not lowered as a result of the proposed change. Please address this in your response. This section needs to be self-explanatory. Use as much space as needed to fully justify the proposed course.

The four-field approach taken in the department of anthropology includes foci in biological, cultural, linguistic and archaeological anthropology. Each of the anthropological subfields has been represented by a 200-level fundamentals course at UAF except for linguistic anthropology. ANTH 223 "Fundamentals of Sociolinguistics" is designed to fulfill this need, balancing the department's curriculum offerings by making a lower-division course in linguistic anthropology available to UAF students and required for anthropology majors. At the same time the Program in Linguistics has before now not been able to offer students a course in Sociolinguistics. This course fulfills this function providing students with an overview of the methods and questions of sociolinguistics both as practiced in linguistics and in anthropology. The hire of Scoli by anthropology and his affiliation with the program in linguistics ensures that the class will be a rigorous introduction for both anthropology and linguistics students and provide a quality addition to UAF's undergraduate course offerings of benefit to students of broad interests.

COURSE DESCRIPTION
This course is an introduction to methods in sociolinguistics as practiced in linguistic anthropology and linguistics. Students will learn approaches to the study of social variation in language and develop practical skills at sociolinguistic analysis through practical exercises throughout the term. We will discuss methods and questions of sociolinguistics and how this differs and relates to other subfields of linguistics and anthropology. We will approach language as a property of "speech communities" which are in part defined through the "patterns of variation" and "ways of speaking" distributed regionally and socially, and circulated through social interactions and social media. We will examine language in its performative value to construct gendered and ethnic identities, define social roles and power relations, and socialize children to the meaningful practices that make us competent members of a society. We will attend to the role of language variation in linguistic change, and the role of ideologies of language in producing and maintaining language variation. Students will participate in weekly practical exercises where they will apply the theory and methods studied in the course to gain experience with techniques for phonetic, discourse, and conversation analysis.
CATALOG DESCRIPTION

ANTH 223 Fundamentals of Sociolinguistics (3)
This course is an introduction to the concepts and methods of linguistic anthropology and sociolinguistics, including language variation and dialectology, language change, social interaction, social networking and media, ways of speaking, semiotics, language in sociocultural institutions, and ideologies of language.
Prerequisites: ANTH 100X or LING 101

COURSE GOALS AND STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOMES:
The goal of this course is to introduce students to the methods and questions of sociolinguistics and linguistic anthropology.
Upon completion of this course, students should be able to:

- Describe the history and various perspectives of the place of human language in culture and society, including language and thought, language and identity, and language and social action.
- Understand how any "single" language is comprised of multiple ways of speaking that pattern with social demographics, social situations, and social functions.
- Know various methods linguistic anthropologists and sociolinguists use to describe and account for linguistic variation in societies, including the consideration of language variation as a sign of social and linguistic change in progress, relationships between language variation and ideologies of language, the construction of social roles, and the role of language in the socialization of children.

INSTRUCTIONAL METHODS:
The course will consist of lectures and weekly practical exercises.

STUDENT EVALUATION:
Students will be evaluated on the bases of class participation, mid-term and final examinations.

SPECIFIC COURSE REQUIREMENTS:

- Class participation: Students are expected to attend class regularly having read the assigned readings and be prepared to talk about them in the class and practicum. Attendance is mandatory. The lecture material will be integrated with the practicum, where we will examine how linguistic analysis is undertaken and applied to address specific problems in linguistic anthropology and sociolinguistics.

- Examinations: Exams will be short essay format in-class exams. Exams will cover data in the assigned readings, lectures, and discussions. The essays will test a student’s overall knowledge of the material. Both exams must be taken. Make-up exams will not be given except due to documented emergencies or unless prior arrangements are made.
Practical Exercises: The Friday meeting will be a hands-on session in which students will learn analytical methods that have been the subject of readings and lectures this week. These will include data documentation, such as conducting interviews, recording and transcribing speech, working with digital media, analyzing multilingual speech, and analyzing different speech genres (narrative, conversation, and elicited speech). The practical exercises are intended to give students active participation in their learning experience to enhance their understanding of the theoretical concepts. Students' practical exercises will be graded on the completion of the assignment and the level of competence demonstrated with the skill set. Graded assignments will consist of short write-ups of method and analysis, or producing materials like phonetic charts, and transcriptions of narratives or conversations.

GRADING:

Coursework will include 2 exams, and conducting and writing up the results of practical exercises. Class participation will count toward a student's final grade. I will use a standard ABCDF grading system with no plus/minuses. The percentage of the final grade for each component is listed in the following table.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Class Participation:</th>
<th>20%</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>

<td>20%</td>
</tr>
<tr>

Grading is based on the following scale. No pluses or minuses will be given:

- 80-89%   B
- 70-79%   C
- 60-69%   D
- 59% and below  F

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY

Plagiarism is a form of cheating in which you use anyone else's ideas and/or words (both published or personally communicated) without proper citation of the source. Whether from a printed source, the Internet, a lecture or a friend or family member, you must cite the source properly, if you got the idea from someone else—and this is true even if you are not using the source's exact wording. Be aware of the University's policies on academic dishonesty.
When academic dishonesty is documented on any assignment or exam, you will receive a zero and the matter may be turned over to the Dean of Students for inquiry, with a failing grade in the course.

You should familiarize yourself with the Student Code of Conduct (http://www.uaf.edu/catalog/current/academics regs3.html#Student Conduct) and the University statement on Plagiarism (http://library.uaf.edu/ls101-plagiarism).
