"The MMP program helped me get much more involved with policy-related work. I have many other skills I can now contribute, including further understanding of law and fisheries, ocean governance, & management strategies for rural development."

– Ivy Schultz, 2024, ADF&G

DEGREE CURRICULUM

Alaska's history and reliance on marine resources has placed the state at the forefront of marine science and policy. Federal and State waters off Alaska comprise nearly one-third of the U.S. total. These waters support the nation's largest fisheries; hold petroleum, mineral, and alternative energy resources; serve as global shipping routes; and are the cultural heritage of Alaska's people. MMP courses study the impacts of marine resource use and how policies can support economic development, food security, conservation, and Indigenous rights in Alaska and around the world.

MMP GRADUATE CAREERS

From commercial fishing, to oil in the Arctic, to wildlife management, to mariculture—these are just some of the industries you can enter with a Master of Marine Policy. Graduates have found immediate employment in the Coast Guard, Alaska's Dept. of Fish and Game, environmental consulting, oil spill response, and university positions. Graduates also continue on to law school.
