Thesis: Gender of Perpetrator, Gender of Victim and Relationship Between Perpetrator and Victim as Factors Influencing How Adults View Coercive Sexual Behavior in Childhood

A 2 x 2 x 2 factorial design examined how adults view coercive sexual behavior between elementary school-aged children. Data was analyzed using correlation coefficients, factor analysis, and multivariate analysis of variance. Findings suggest the gender of the children and their relationship influence how adults view coercive sexual behavior.

Thesis: Vertebral Pathologies in Skeletons of Alaskan Eskimos from Golovin Bay and Nunivak Island

The primary objective of this dissertation is to analyze vertebral pathologies within two Native Alaskan skeletal collections. Patterns of activity-related pathologies suggest that subsistence activities of the people of Golovin Bay took a much greater toll on the back than did the activities of those living on Nunivak Island.
